

📷 Eloise Atkinson

■ QLD ■

Eloise Atkinson, daughter of former Brisbane Lord Mayor Sallyanne Atkinson, has just been appointed chair of the not-for-profit affordable housing provider, BHC.

Alex Tilbury, News Corp Australia Network
September 10, 2016 12:00am

Congratulations to Brisbane architect Eloise Atkinson, daughter of former Brisbane Lord Mayor Sally-Anne Atkinson, who has just been appointed chair of the not-for-profit affordable housing provider, BHC.

With over 20 years' experience in the design of public and affordable housing and eight years as a BHC board director, Ms Atkinson takes over the role as lower income households are increasingly being priced out of urban communities.

"First and foremost we need to deliver more affordable housing and that is not just about delivering a dwelling, it is about giving people a home," Ms Atkinson said.

"We know having a home is the key to better health outcomes and access to education and employment, so delivering housing actually reduces other potential costs to the community."

Since its inception in 2002, BHC has helped more than 3000 households into more than 1500 brand new homes, across 35 key growth locations throughout Brisbane